

Dog

Dogs make up less than 0.5% of all animals involved in health research, but their contribution is significant. From diabetes and cancer to heart disease and so much more, dogs have helped scientists understand, treat and prevent diseases that impact humans and animals alike. That's right, animal research benefits veterinary medicine as well.