In Good Hands

Enrichment Matters

Welfare for research animals is supremely important to biomedical science—not just for good science. It matters because laboratory animal scientists and technicians love animals. That’s one reason they provide environmental enrichment through specialized structures, resources, and nutrition.

These facilitate play and exercise for improved mental well-being and physical wellness. Enrichment ensures that research animals are always in good hands.

BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH AWARENESS DAY
BRADglobal.org

Sponsored by